Arrival to Hanfthal village

Tour of the village and the hemp museum.

The name of the village Hanfthal ("Hemp Valley"), first recorded in writing in 1149 as "Haniftal", is demonstrably derived from the hemp plant (German Hanf), which was grown in this area. Cultivation of hemp occurs in contemporary texts of gift deeds such as "Hanif". It is obvious that the municipal pond at the time in the middle of the circular village was used for soaking hemp in preparation for processing it into fiber.

We thank the researcher Friedrich Winna for these findings, who wrote down the history of the village of Hanfthal during his decades-long research work. His Hanftal chronicle was also the basis for a three-day historical celebration of the 850th anniversary of the foundation of the village in 1999. About 10,000 people visited this impressive holiday. The topic here was also hemp, which gave the village its name.

On the occasion of the construction of the adjacent children's playground, the municipality renovated the ice cream shop building and gave the exhibition a dignified framework. The Hemp Museum aims to help this multifaceted plant, which has accompanied, clothed, nourished and inspired people for centuries, gain the reputation it deserves.

The educational trail which leads around the village speaks to visitors about the history of the village and also all different kind of uses of hemp on only in past but also modern applications.

It has an incredible location along the banks of the Danube River, on the border of the Carpathian Mountains with its rich vineyards.

Bratislava has 2000 years of rich history dating back to Celtic times. It has been part of the Roman Empire, over centuries attracted royal families such as the Habsburgs and has seen coronations of Hungarian kings including the empress Maria Theresa. However, the last century was not kind to Bratislava. Its multiculturalism and charm was damaged during World War II, followed by 40 years of communism. In the course of these years many have forgotten Bratislava's legendary past.

Recently the city has undergone a great reconstruction and cultural reawakening and made an amazing comeback, turning into a favorite city break destination with the Old Town freshly renovated. Tourists are rediscovering the city's charming baroque Old Town and gothic treasures, stylish restaurants, inviting cafes and teeming night life.
